

In June, the Israel Association of Actuaries (ILAA) celebrated its 70th anniversary – the biblical life expectancy of “threescore years and ten”

– with a conference in Tel Aviv. The association was founded by nine actuaries in 1946, during the British Mandate, and has grown over the years to a total membership of 350.

The IFoA was represented by Marjorie Ngwenya (pictured below), just a few days before her official appointment as president-elect. She greeted nearly 300 delegates at the conference, and also addressed a dinner for the lecturers.

In addition, she met members of the ILAA’s council and education committee to discuss matters of mutual interest. The ILAA uses the IFoA’s course material and examinations, and signed a mutual recognition agreement in 2014.

The conference attracted speakers from the US, France,

Germany and elsewhere, among them Malcolm Campbell, president of the International Actuarial Association.

In total, over 25 lecturers spoke on a variety of topics from both academic and practical perspectives. There was also a lively panel discussion entitled ‘Who moved my pension?’.

Naama Hashmonai (pictured above), president of the ILAA, noted the impressive attendance by actuaries and other insurance professionals at the conference, and expressed hope that this would increase the public awareness of actuaries and their role.

Life Conference 2016

2-4 November, EICC, Edinburgh

What are the real-world issues facing life insurance consumers in 2016? Will robots be our next life insurance agents? Are actuaries more or less biased than other people? Find the answers to these questions at the Life Conference 2016 as we share forward-thinking strategies, insights and the vital issues that will shape the industry’s future.

This premier conference offers five plenary sessions, 70 workshops, Masterclass seminars and unparalleled networking opportunities with some of the brightest minds in the world of life insurance. Industry experts will share innovative approaches, case studies and executive insights into some of today’s biggest topics through talks, presentations and panel discussions. Get the latest updates on Solvency II, Model Error Risk, IFRS 4 Phase II, Regulation, and much more.

With Brexit taking place, we shall have an Economist discussing the impact this will have on the insurance industry and the UK.
